Excludable and Inexcludable Goods often have some characteristics in common. For example, they are often non-rivalrous. However, they are not necessarily non-excludable. For example, a lighthouse is a classic example of a good that is non-rivalrous but excludable. The lighthouse's light can be used by many ships, but the lighthouse can be built on a private property and the light can be turned off for ships that do not pay for it.
